

FIRST ANNOUNCEMENT

fit for the FUTURE?

How Europe's local and regional governments are preparing

MALMÖ 22-24 APRIL 2009

The City of Malmö

Malmö was officially mentioned for the first time in 1275, under its former name of Malmhauga. In 1437 the city received its city coat of arms from the sovereign, Eric of Pomerania, and had at that time, around 5,000 inhabitants.

Malmö, with its nearly 300,000 inhabitants has a vision of being a sustainable city; socially, economically and ecologically. This will be achieved and maintained by consolidating and raising the level of education, strengthening integration and increasing the number of employees with a foreign background. In concrete terms, this means, among other things, continuing investments in ecological environment.

Over the years, Malmö has made an exciting journey from industrial city to knowledge city. There are currently 25,000 university students, 10,000 high school students and 8,000 adult education students in Malmö.

Welcome

Every three years, the general assembly of the Council of European Municipalities and Regions (CEMR) brings together hundreds of representatives of local and regional governments from across Europe and beyond.

Between 22 and 24 April 2009, CEMR will hold its general assembly in Malmö. It will be the perfect time and venue to reflect on the European issues that directly affect our towns and regions: the development of our public services, climate change and energy, economic growth and the environment, the state of local democracy, town twinning...

For three days, elected local and regional leaders, experts, representatives of EU institutions and other stakeholders will debate – and sometimes argue over – this fundamental question: are our towns and regions fit for the future? Are we ready for the challenges of today and tomorrow?

Be part of these debates. Join us in Malmö.

Michael Häupl, CEMR President
Mayor and Governor of Vienna

The future of all cities and regions is based on having a good dialogue with citizens and business-owners. If we have that we can jointly take care of our major commitments within climate and sustainability, immigration and migration, service and age composition in the population, etc. These are issues that are of vital importance if our cities and municipalities are to provide good service and also continue to be attractive in the future.

These are issues that will be discussed during the 24th CEMR General Assembly in Malmö. That is why it is my great pleasure to welcome you to the meeting and to our work in creating our joint future!

Chairman of the Executive Board
