The EU is increasingly paying attention to the territorial dimension of its policies. Awareness is rising of the ‘added value’ of considering the territory as a unit of analysis and a basis for policy making. The EU Constitutional Treaty would have included territorial cohesion as an objective and a competence for the further development of the Union. Currently, the main forum for European cooperation on territorial cohesion is the intergovernmental level. However, Community policies also have an increasing territorial influence. This holds true in particular for the EU’s Common Agricultural and Regional Policy but also with regard to Environmental and Transport Policies.

At the Informal Ministerial Meeting held in Rotterdam (2004), ministers responsible for territorial development in the EU member states agreed to assess jointly the territorial perspectives of the EU. The German Presidency has made territorial cohesion a priority and has organised a number of expert conferences, including a symposium on Integrated perspectives of metropolitan regions in polycentric urban systems - areas of spatial responsibility and cooperation, held in Berlin on 14 March 2007. This process will culminate in the adoption of the “EU Territorial Agenda” and the “Leipzig Charter on Sustainable European Cities” at the Informal Ministerial Meeting on 24/25 May.

Against the background of the intergovernmental initiatives but also in preparation of the upcoming review of the EU budget, the Council of European Municipalities and Regions (CEMR) together with the European Parliament Intergroup on URBAN-Housing is organising a conference, focusing on territorial governance and urban-rural partnerships¹.

Objectives

- Highlight the interdependence between urban and rural actors and the need to look more carefully at urban-rural relations. Focus on territorial governance and illustrate innovative, good practice in cooperation between urban and rural actors.
- Identify common challenges and potentials and areas where cooperation is of particular importance, including:
  - Economic development and clusters of innovation: how to promote competitiveness and networking between urban and rural economic actors?
  - Spatial planning, ‘urban sprawl’ and the environmental implications – squaring the circle of competitiveness and sustainability
  - The value of nature conservation, recreation and leisure space – interdependencies and new opportunities
- How to strengthen such partnerships? Is the current EU framework the right one? Is the link between rural development policies and regional policy sufficient?

¹ In December 2005, the European Council had agreed that a comprehensive assessment of the Union’s financial framework would have to be undertaken. The European Commission will report to the heads of government in 2008/2009.
